

NEW HEAD OF SALVATION ARMY IS WORTHY SON

General Bramwell Booth.

The new commander of the Salvation Army, General Bramwell Booth, is a big man—physically and mentally. He stands over six feet high and is of military carriage. A British cabinet minister once said of him that he would be worth $50,000 a year to any of the great English administrative departments, and that he could have made millions in the business world.

He now follows his illustrious father in supreme command of the international Salvation Army, with more than 75,000 * officers preaching, and teaching, and rescuing the fallen in fifty-five countries, just as he has followed his father all his life.
